Louisville milliner designs fascinators for Vineyard Vines

From timeless seersucker to eye-catching prints, Vineyard Vines can always be spotted at in the seas of people at the Kentucky Oaks and Derby. This year, they are adding to their repertoire with an exclusive line of fascinators, made by Louisville milliner Jenny Pfanenstiel, owner of The Formé Millinery Hat Company and Official Milliner of the Kentucky Derby Museum. Pfanenstiel’s headpieces have adorned the heads of celebrities such as First Lady, Michelle Obama, Madonna and Oprah Winfrey.

Inspired by bright florals, the tradition of the Oaks — which covers the racetrack in pink bunting — and the inclusive style of Vineyard Vines, Pfanenstiel designed a collection that could be worn by any race viewer.

To order a Vineyard Vines fascinator and view the entire Derby 2017 collection of men’s and women’s apparel and accessories, visit www.vineyardvines.com.

The New Blak, a local sustainable clothing company

The New Blak is a locally owned fashion business which designs timeless, sustainable, environmentally-friendly, clothing to challenge the fast fashion world.

Rather than manufacturing quick, cheap and trendy garments, which creates tons of fabric waste and an enormous environmental footprint, The New Blak eliminates fabric waste using as many sustainable materials as possible.

“We’re taking this idea back to where it all started: the mall. We’re opening our first solo storefront,” said Amanda Dougherty, founder of The New Blak. She says your little black dress will be handcrafted for you, only and made right where you buy it. This means no fossil fuels will be used to transport your dress across the ocean or via semi-truck.

The new storefront in Oxmoor Mall is being partially funded by a Kickstarter campaign that offers gifts, discounts and more to its backers. If you are ready to join Dougherty and her fashion revolution, follow https://www.kickstarter.com/projects/thenew-blak/the-new-blak?ref=category_recommended to learn more.
